

Epilogue

Lynn and I have been visiting Spain annually for the last decade because my son and daughter-in-law were married there and now have three little foxes, Isabel, Lidia and Raul. Although we usually spend our time in Madrid where they live we have had occasion to visit other towns and cities: Rascafria, Toledo, Barcelona, Figueres, Bilbao and San Sebastian (Donostia).

The art museums in Spain are excellent. We have been to the Prado, the Reina Sofia and the Thyssen in Madrid. Just this year the Reina Sofia had a Dali exhibition that we enjoyed, including the three little foxes. In Barcelona we went to the museum of the Foundation Joan Miro, and to the Picasso museum. In nearby Figueres we saw the Dali museum that is housed in an old theater that has been turned into a work of art itself. For me it was reminiscent of the Siqueiros museum in Mexico City that is also in a house converted into a work of art itself. In Bilbao we visited the relatively new Guggenheim museum, the architecture of which was designed by Frank Gehry.

When we visited Barcelona several years ago (2003?), a Gaudi celebration was ongoing. We saw the La Sagrada Familia Basilica, Park Güell and several buildings. One building is a bank but for this occasion it was open to the public.
